RSS Feeds

Cancer.Net provides a number of RSS feeds for users to add to their aggregator readers. Not familiar with RSS? Here is some basic information:

What are RSS Feeds?

Really Simple Syndication (RSS) is a family of Web feed formats used to publish frequently updated workssuch as blog entries, news headlines, audio, and video in a standardized format. An RSS "feed" (also called a web feed or channel) includes full or summarized text, plus information such as publishing dates and authorship. Web feeds enable users to read or view up-to-date content from multiple sources, in a single location. No more hunting through Bookmarks for your favorite websites, the aggregator does it for you.

What are RSS Readers?

RSS readers are software programs that collect, organize, and display RSS feeds. RSS readers, also called aggregators, allow users to scan headings from a multitude of blogs or news sites and stay current with Cancer.Net's articles and activities. An RSS reader, feed reader, or aggregator, which can be web-based, desktop-based, mobile device or any computerized Internet-connected device.

How Often are RSS Feeds Updated?

The update frequency of Cancer.Net's RSS feeds vary per feed, but are updated at least monthly.

Managing your Feed

Once the list in your feed has been generated you have several options, Edit, Delete, and Share.

- Edit enables you to select the number of articles that will appear in the reader.
- Delete is for removing articles from the feed.
- Share enables you to share this information with people in your Address book, if for example, you are using Google and also have a Google e-mail account.

Need A Reader?
