

Mark Bernstein, MD [1]

Cancer.Net Specialty Editor: Childhood Cancers

IWK Health Centre, Halifax, Nova Scotia

Dr. Mark Bernstein is currently Head/Chief of the Department of Pediatrics at the IWK Health Center/Dalhousie University Faculty of Medicine. He was formerly the head of the Division of Pediatric Hematology/Oncology. Before coming to Halifax in 2006, he was head of Pediatric Hematology/Oncology at Ste. Justine Hospital and the University of Montreal.

He works with the international Children's Oncology Group and other research networks on clinical trials to determine optimal dosing and the most effective combinations of chemotherapy drugs for young people. He is also Chair of the Atlantic Provinces Pediatric Hematology Oncology Network (APPHON), which is continuing to improve a system to deliver care to children and adolescents with cancer and serious blood disorders as close to home as possible.

In addition, he is Chair of the Management Committee of the Cancer in Young People in Canada registry, which is developing a uniform database for treatment and outcome surveillance for young people up to at least 19 and perhaps 24 years of age. The database will be useful for both clinical and research purposes.

Dr. Bernstein's interests are in cancer clinical trials in pediatric populations and de-centralized health services delivery. He is involved in several professional organizations and is an Honorary Member and Senior Scientist of Beatrice Hunter Cancer Research Institute (BHCRI), was the Chair of the BHCRI Working Group and has served as a member of a BHCRI Scientific Review Committee.
